Collaborative collections

IIPC members are collaborating to build public web archive collections based on themes or events that align with the following criteria:

- of high interest to IIPC members
- broader than any one member’s responsibility or mandate
- of higher value to research due to broader perspective provided by multiple institutions
- transnational in scope.

The project is administered by the IIPC Content Development Group. More information about the project is available on their page.

and international levels in 2004. However, the personal and impersonal ties lack the “institutional shroud” of human rights laws, policies, and resources that include violence against women as a public safety issue worthy of rights protection.

Cross-border Organizational Birth and Growth

Amigos de las Mujeres de Juárez was the pioneering cross-border network to emerge in 2001. Activists worked with victims’ families, raising funds for them and other NGOs in Juárez. Amigos is a tax-exempt U.S. organization based in Las Cruces, New Mexico.\(^\text{37}\) The Coalition against Violence emerged to mobilize visibility for the murders and to connect that visibility to systemic and policy change, particularly at the binational level.

women disappeared in Mexico between 1993 and 2003. Other sources say the number of disappeared women in Juárez alone is over four thousand.

In January 2006, the Mexican government issued its fourth report, or 400+ page “Informe,” from the PGR. In this report the Fiscalía Especial para la Atención de Delitos Relacionados con los Homicidios de Mujeres en el Municipio de Juárez, Chihuahua (Special Prosecutor’s Office for Attention to Crimes Related to Female Homicides in the Municipality of Juárez, Mexico) asserts that 63 percent of the 379 femicides committed between 1993 and 2005 have been resolved (for a total of 238 cleared cases) and that result of sexual violence; and 76 are listed as being of undetermined cause, which could include any or all of the previous motives. As Amnesty International notes in its February 2006 public statement in response to this fourth “Informe,”

The PGR appears to have concluded that only those crimes involving sexual violence—approximately 20 percent of the 379 murders documented—amount to gender violence. Domestic violence appears not to be considered a crime in the judicial system, which leaves women to face these violent deaths on their own.

Mexico: Killings and abductions of women in Ciudad Juárez and the City of Chihuahua - the struggle for justice goes on Amnesty International welcomes the publication of the concluding report of the Federal Special Prosecutor's Office investigating the murders of women in Ciudad Juárez and the naming of a new Special Prosecutor, Alicia Elena Pérez Duarte, to lead the new national Special Prosecutor's Office for violent crimes against women.

The organization particularly welcomes the official recognition in this fourth report that there was systemic failure to prevent and punish many of the crimes against women in Ciudad Juárez, Chihuahua state, during many years.

However, the organization has several concerns regarding the methodology and conclusions of Special Prosecutor's Office's report, which is part of the Office of the Attorney General of the Republic (Poder Judicial de la Federación, PGR). In particular, despite continuing high rates of violence against women and impunity in Ciudad Juárez, the PGR appears to downplay the scale of the crimes committed against women and suggests that a "perception different from reality" has been created about the crimes by those seeking to highlight the crimes and impunity.

The basis for these conclusions is reportedly the technical legal (técnico-jurídico) review of the evidence contained in case files of the investigations undertaken by the local Chihuahua
